A wish, whether it can be realized or not, is a kind of strong power. If I can make a wish, I will give it to a lovely little girl that I met in an orphanage. The reason why I do it is simple — because whenever I look at her, it seems that I look on my childhood. I grew up in the orphanage and afterward I was adopted by my parents now. When I talk to the little girl, I remember all the things before. To tell the truth, my childhood was not happy whatsoever. In spite of the fact that people there were so kind, I always felt I didn't have the feeling of a family. Not until a kind couple adopted me did I feel that I was a member of a family. Isolated as I was, my parents still chose me because they knew I was eager to be loved. As a result, I appreciated them a lot and my love to them cannot be overemphasized.

Therefore, I wish the little girl could encounter good parents like mine in the future. It goes without saying that after the wish realized, she surely can have a much more wonderful life and devote herself to helping much more people in need. Though it is just a small wish, the power created by it is so strong that we can't imagine.
