Sally is a student who studies in a vocational high school. After being bombarded with piles of assignments, she decided to go to a picnic with her best friends at a park in front of a famous museum. She prepared the well-known butter cookies from the "Jenny Bakery" in Hong Kong, and her handmade Irwin mango cakes, which are extremely tasty and soft. Her friends also brought some beverages, such as coke and juice. They had a great time and chatted with each other in the afternoon.

When Sally went home at five o'clock, she felt that her stomach was really hurt. As soon as she lay down on her bed, she noticed that she wanted to vomit. She rushed into the washroom and threw up all of the food she consumed that day. After that, she told her father and went to see a doctor. The doctor said she had a normal stomachache and it might be caused by the food that she had eaten at the picnic. The doctor also gave Sally the prescription, and wished she would feel better soon.

After going to see a doctor, Sally called her best friends about her situation and suggested that they should make sure if the food are fresh next time when they have a picnic. All in all, Sally learned the importance of eating fresh food, and she would wash her hands correctly when she makes the Irwin mango cakes. She looked forward to getting better soon.
